Begin your review with the title, author, publisher, date, number of pages, and price, as in the following example: From Fascism to Democracy: Culture and Politics in the Italian Election of 1948, by Robert A. Ventresca. Toronto, University of Toronto Press, 2003. xiv, 368 pp. $68.00.

Your review should be double-spaced and typed with wide margins. End your review by giving your institution (underlined) at the left margin and your name at the right margin, on the same line. Please keep within the assigned wordage. If you require fewer words than assigned, you may write a shorter review. If you feel the book warrants more words than assigned, or should be reviewed with another, consult the editor.

The review should be interesting, informative, and fair, and should offer something to the non-specialist as well as the specialist.

Quotations should be minimal and include page numbers in parentheses. References to other works, if any, should be in the text. Footnotes are not accepted in reviews, only in review essays. For all other questions regarding format or style, refer to the “Instructions for Contributors” section of our website, accessible under the “For Authors” link.

The editor reserves the right to make minor changes and corrections, to cut where the assigned length is exceeded, and to exercise discretion where unnecessary or inappropriate editorialization is concerned. The editor likewise reserves the right to refuse to publish a review that is submitted after the assigned deadline has passed. If you are in doubt as to your ability to meet the assigned deadline, please contact the Journal in advance.

To save time and money, the Journal proofreads all reviews in the editorial office. It does not provide authors of reviews with proofs, so please ensure that your typescript is fully corrected.

All reviewers should be aware that their work may appear for sale online by Amazon.com. The Journal is not responsible for this development, nor does the Journal endorse or profit from it. For details, consult the “Bulletin for Authors and Reviewers” on our website’s homepage.

If technologically feasible, we would appreciate receiving a copy of your review in electronic form either by e-mail to: cjh@duke.usask.ca or on a diskette. Formats in ASCII, WordPerfect, or Microsoft Word are acceptable. Hard copies of the review should be sent only if accents, diacritical marks, or other symbols are not converted properly on the Journal’s machines. In such instances, the managing editor will let the reviewer know if a hard copy is needed.
